MARKET ENTRY

Increasing consumption levels, expanding food and beverage retail segment, poor processing infrastructure set to be upgraded, and facilitative government policies offer sizeable opportunities for foreign investors across the Indian food manufacturing supply chain.

As the total consumption of the food and beverage segment in India is expected to increase significantly, the fragmented industry is looking outward at foreign players for investment in food manufacturing infrastructure, technology, and product innovation.

India Presence Modes

Local Subsidiary/ Joint Venture

Limited Liability Partnership

Distribution Channels

Single Brand Retail

Multi-Brand Retail

E-commerce

As the Indian food processing sector struggles with high wastage, cold chain and storage facility infrastructure emerges as the leading segment for foreign investors to enter the Indian market. A growing young and working population has captured the interest of food processing players in frozen food products which further highlights the opportunity in processing technology.

The sector is in immediate requirement of product innovation that also retains and enhances the nutritive value of processed food.

Introduction of convenience and instant products while developing product lines that suit the diverse Indian palate presents a 'win-win' scenario for new players looking to explore the Indian market..
